Flying Over

Allen Dulles, director of the central intelligence agency, will be faced with a transportation problem when the big spy headquarters moves to a new building to be put up somewhere far out on the edge of Washington.

He is thinking seriously of using a helicopter to surmount the traffic tangle when he has to come downtown for conferences. He has investigated far enough to pick out possible landing spots—in the backyard of the White House, or on the roof of the commerce department building across the street.
